ActiveSky's technology makes it possible for people to download images, view graphics-enhanced mini Web pages and receive streaming content on Internet-enabled cell phones and PDAs. Both companies will collaborate to integrate the ActiveSky rich media delivery platform into InfoSpace's wireless platform, which today is deployed to more than 20 leading wireless operators internationally, offering customers enhanced services and applications.

"The next step in the evolution of our broadband capabilities is 2.5G and 3G wireless, in which we plan to provide a clear path from offering data services to delivery of rich media over current and next generation wireless networks," said Naveen Jain, chairman and CEO of InfoSpace, Inc. "By enriching the user experience, increasing the degree of interactivity available on wireless devices, and creating a branding environment, ActiveSky's technology helps us create value throughout for consumers, content providers, advertisers and mobile operators."

"With a solid list of wireless carriers in place, InfoSpace is an ideal partner for ActiveSky," said Scott Marquardt, CEO, ActiveSky. "Working together, we will enable carriers to widen their offering to support an array of rich media mobile services and applications, creating new value and opportunities for content providers and consumers, especially with the emergence of 2.5G and 3G networks."
